News and Views

April 2013

From our Editor

GREETINGS FELLOW MEMBERS!

Have we had spring yet!! If we have any more rain the spring bulbs will float out of the ground. I do not know about most of you but seems like we are constantly mopping up mud and wet everywhere in the house. Have you noticed that most of the Irish do not care what the conditions are outside, mud, snow, rain whatever, they are loving to be outside and running around to see if they missed anything from when they were last out. You gotta love the enthusiasm and all the energy.

This edition of the News & Views will be a little lighter but Jackie & I wanted to put out a newsletter to stay on top of things.

Additionally, we would still like to hear from many of you. Your news and your views are important. Please contribute, your bit of news or contribution may be of utmost importance to someone in the club. Also, it would be good to know who in the club has a celebration they would like to share or know of a person who would enjoy hearing from club members with a card etc.

DID YOU KNOW . . . ?

Volunteers make Lake Hudson Recreation Area a better home for pheasants, other wildlife

Submitted by Janet Parker

Michigan's Pheasant Restoration Initiative got a boost recently as about a dozen volunteers from the Lake Hudson Pheasant Cooperative showed up to work with Department of Natural Resources Parks and Recreation Division employees to take out an overgrown fence row between two grassy fields at Lake Hudson Recreation Area. The goal is to create a large block of habitat that will be more hospitable to pheasants and other grasslands residents as well.

The Lake Hudson area is in one of three, three-county pilot areas the DNR Wildlife Division has identified as potential pheasant restoration hubs. It is somewhat unusual in that it is not a wildlife management or game area, but part of the Parks and Recreation Division.

The Lake Hudson Recreation Area consists of 2,800 acres of land as well as a 500-acre lake, which is a well-known muskellunge fishery. The area boasts 50 campsites and a day-use area with a beach and is also a dark-sky preserve. Area staff has identified about 500 acres to be managed as grasslands as well as perhaps as many as 200 more that could be converted to grasslands, explained area manager Jim O'Brien.

DNR staff recently mowed about 250 acres that had grown up into brush for conversion to quality grasslands, O'Brien said.

The work at Lake Hudson is ongoing, said Ray Fahlsing, who heads the stewardship program with the DNR Parks and Recreation Division. Fahlsing said the DNR has cobbled together a number of funding sources as well as enlisted volunteers to get the job done.

The Lenawee Chapter of Pheasants Forever donated $5,000 that the DNR is using for tractor fuel and herbicide, Fahlsing said. In addition, volunteers from the Monroe County Chapter of Pheasants Forever recently cleared 20 acres of brush.

"They pulled brush out by the roots and then mowed the entire 20 acres," Fahlsing said. "It was quite the operation, better than any contractor I've ever worked with."

Volunteers from the Washtenaw County Chapter of Pheasants Forever cleared an additional 10 acres, Fahlsing said.

"And we were able to obtain some grant money to pay for removal of another 6,000 feet of fence rows," Fahlsing said. "We're fitting all kinds of pieces together to get this done."

A number of fields are currently in agriculture under share-cropping operations, he added. As those leases expire they will be converted back into grasslands.

“We want to see bobolinks and short-eared owls and all kinds of species that use grasslands, not just pheasants,” Fahlsing said.

Ken Prats, a retired trucker who lives on a farm near the recreation area that he has enrolled in the federal Conservation, was one of the volunteers who spent the day removing and piling up brush – which will be burned – as well as removing old wire fencing and pulling out fence posts.

“We’ve got big aspirations that this program is going to pan out,” said Prats, 55. “We’ve always had a good bird population around here, but where the land was in crops, there were just birds here and there. Once we got it into CRP, the first couple of years we had good rains and the grass came up real well and the birds just proliferated.”

Nelson Evers, a painting contractor from Tecumseh who described himself as one of the “core members” of the Lake Hudson Pheasant Cooperative, said he was encouraged by the turnout.

“We want to clear these fences so we can take these three fields and eventually have one 90-acre parcel all in one piece,” Evers said. “The members are pretty passionate about doing this.

“We started out with just a couple of guys and we had 12 or 13 people show up for this work day. There were some sons and daughters and mothers out here. It’s kind of a family thing. And they’re all workers – that’s the important thing.”

Volunteers spent about three hours on the project on a cold, wet Saturday, reducing the fence row to piles of brush and a few stumps.

“Lake Hudson is a great example of co-op partners rallying around the pheasant initiative,” said Al Stewart, upland game bird program leader with the DNR. “They’re actively working to get things going on the ground.”

Lake Hudson, in Lenawee County, is part of the Lenawee-Monroe-Hillsdale County pilot area. The others are in Clinton, Gratiot and Saginaw counties, and in Huron, Tuscola and Sanilac counties in the Thumb.

“There’s a co-op developed in Barry County actively engaged in the initiative, too,” Stewart said. “We’re working to get local co-ops formed throughout southern Michigan, though we’re concentrating on the pilot areas to really get things moving.”

The DNR envisions eventually creating and preserving 200,000 acres of pheasant habitat, Stewart said.

“The focus is on working on a landscape scale, with public lands as the core of the activities, but expanding into private lands as well,” he explained. “In the past, habitat improvements have centered on small areas. This is an attempt to do things on a big scale.”

ARE YOU AWARE??

Submitted by Barbara Riegle

I have been asked to share some information that we just gleaned after months of misery with one of our dogs. Last fall we noticed one of our girls limping. It was slight at first but then got worse and the first visit to the vet indicated a hotspot on the bottom of the foot in between the pads where the hair grows. We typically do not have hotspots! Unfortunately, we broke the major a couple times because there were moments when the foot appeared to be improving. The soaking and all the preparations seemed to help but the limp was still prominent.

A series of antibiotics were used and a culture was taken to identify what organisms might be causing this problem. You would be surprised what nasty things are carried on a dog's foot. To make a long story shorter, we took her to MSU to see a specialist especially after a second foot was affected and her litter sister had also exhibited the same reaction. MSU Dermatology Dept thought it might be an allergy but after keeping our girl for 2 hours it was determined she had a chemical burn as did her sister on all the feet in various degrees. Both dogs are housed in the house. The diagnosis was a chemical burn.

SOOO the big question was what were they walking on? I started looking for clues in the house. Actually the answer was staring us in the face. A friend who had been doing the kennel/house sitting while we were on one of our trips, commissioned a carpet cleaning service & a cleaning lady to come in and clean the house as a surprise to us. Since I have never used any cleaning service before, and the house looked great, we decided to keep the person on mainly to do the floors. We learned that Lavender Pine Sol was used on all the wood & tile floors. I went on line & found out a whole heap of bad reviews about how toxic Pine Sol is to domesticated animals. We checked all of the cleaning products that were being used and because the Pine Sol is what they are always walking on, it had to be the culprit. Every two weeks the girls were getting a layer of toxic material on their feet. I have further learned that after several applications, it takes awhile to remove the toxic remnants from the wood and block flooring, that if water is spilled and the dog walks through it the toxic material is activated.

I have gleaned more information on some of these products and learned that any cleaning solution with the word sol on the label, such as Lysol etc. could be hazardous to domesticated animals and humans as well. This was a real "brain teaser" for the veterinary community and a learning experience for all of us including the 2 veterinary interns at MSU.

SUGGESTION BOX

Member Karen Lynch suggested that perhaps the club might be interested in putting together an Irish Setter calendar as a fundraiser project. The photos would be candid shots of ISCM member's dogs. Since our breed is quite versatile there would be numerous opportunities to capture them on camera.

GREAT FUNDRAISING IDEA KAREN!

Anyone interested in coordinating this project? Come on you shutter bugs . . .!
